INSPIRED BY AN ICON. DESIGNED FOR THE ADVENTUROUS SPIRIT.

In her first women's collection for Eddie Bauer, celebrated fashion stylist Iliaria Urbinati takes inspiration from our first female guide, Christine "Stine" Bauer—Eddie's wife and "wilderness companion,"—to design a modern collection for the adventurous spirit.

A passionate outdoorswoman, Stine advocated the idea that feminine style and rugged functionality were not mutually exclusive. She pushed the boundaries of what an outdoor enthusiast looked like, silencing any critics with her unparalleled success in the field and giving women across the Northwest their own highly accomplished role model.

"Stine was my muse," says Urbinati, who found her inspiration in the Eddie Bauer archives. There, she learned about Stine's adventures and outdoor accomplishments, as well as functional outdoor pieces, classic silhouettes, and patterns worn by Stine and Eddie. The collection modernizes some of the brand's most iconic styles, reimagining these elements with modern twists that embrace a contemporary edge.

THE ORIGINAL REBORN

Ilaria reimagines the first Eddie Bauer logo—the Sport Shop chevron that was worn by Eddie during a film shoot in 1928—for her timeless and contemporary button-front cardigan.

A NEW, OUTDOOR FEMININE

Eddie's wife Stine reframed what an outdoor enthusiast looked like. Ilaria took inspiration from Stine's Pendleton Native American print jacket and Eddie's Skyliner (the first down jacket patented in America), in a new, modern take on both.

THE ORIGINAL OUTDOOR WOMEN'S GUIDE

Christine "Stine" Bauer helped to transform the Eddie Bauer brand. A talented seamstress, she was also an eight-time Washington State Trapshooting Champion. An accomplished artist, she was passionate about hunting and fishing, and was an outspoken advocate for women who enjoyed an active lifestyle. Stine was the original Eddie Bauer women's guide, creating the brand's first womenswear department.
